Eliciting Pronouns and Reflexives in Malayalam: eng-mal bilingual set

This Malayalam language questionnaire, designed to collect data on the Malayalam language, is presented by Yangchen Roy from the Centre for Linguistics at JNU, as part of her PhD research work. In this phase, she is being assisted by Sarah M. to execute the questionnaire. Please read the following before giving your consent to proceed with the questionnaire.

About the research: the language questionnaire is designed to examine how adult speakers of Malayalam interpret and use pronouns. Participants are required to translate each English sentence into Malayalam.

Risks: There are no known risks to participating in these tasks.

Confidentiality: The tasks guarantee complete anonymity. At no point in time, during the analysis of the language samples or during publication, will your identity be revealed.

Rights of the Participant: Participation is completely voluntary and you may withdraw at any point during the questionnaire. You may contact the researcher at yangchenroy@gmail.com to inquire further on the nature of the research.

By clicking on the following "NEXT", I submit that the terms and conditions of the task have been adequately explained to me and, therefore, agree to participate in the questionnaire.

* Indicates required question

Instruction for questionnaire executioner

The following phrases or sentences need to be translated colloquially by Malayalam native speaker participants.

Pay close attention to the speech context provided within '[]' and make sure you convey the context to the speaker.

For each phrase/sentence ask if there is more than one way to translate it in the target language, in which case note down all the ways to say it. Ensure that you separate each response with a semi colon ';')

Some phrases/sentences may not be translatable into the target language. In such cases do not force the speaker to give you a literal translation. Each sentence you get from your native speaker participant should be a real, meaningful Malayalam sentence.

Sentences need not comply with literal or written Malayalam standards. The aim here is to gather data from spoken Malayalam, not written Malayalam
